Due to phenomenal demand for tickets for its final two weeks, The Pink Floyd Exhibition: Their Mortal Remains will extend opening hours as well as stay open for a period of 42 hours before it must close on 15 October. On Monday 2 October a final 4,500 tickets will become available, giving the public one last chance to see the hit exhibition.

Taking place at London's V&A, the exhibition will open for the entire weekend of 6 October, welcoming visitors for 42 hours until Sunday 8 October. The Exhibition will also be opening its doors on selected days from 9:00am and will be open until 10:00pm where possible. Full available hours can be viewed at vam.ac.uk/pinkfloyd

Described by The Guardian as “stunning”, The Times calling it “a real feast for the senses” and the Sunday Mirror saying it's "almost as good as seeing the band live", The Pink Floyd Exhibition: Their Mortal Remains has welcomed over 373,000 visitors to date, making it the most successful exhibition of its kind. These extended hours will give fans a final chance to experience it before the V&A doors close and the exhibition moves on.

The exhibition is promoted by Iconic Entertainment Studios.
