W&A

The V&A's Archive of Art and Design (AAD) holds the working papers of individual artists and designers, as well as the records of companies and associations involved in all aspects of applied art and design. The archives can be consulted by appointment at Blythe House, located near Olympia in West London.

From the classic couture of the House of Worth to the street style of Antoni + Alison, the collections of the Archive of Art and Design show how fashion design has changed since the 19th century. As well as designs and sketches, there are also fabric samples, marketing records, photographs and correspondence, documenting the careers of several top British fashion designers.

Revolutionary fashion styles are represented in the archives of John Stephen (the 'King of Carnaby Street'), Barbara Hulanicki and Biba, the Presage fashion forecast magazine, and 1970s knitwear by Ritva. More traditional styles can be seen through the archives of Lachasse, Ronald Paterson, Michael Sherard and Victor Stiebel, while popular fashion is recorded in extensive collections of home knitting and sewing patterns.

Fashion photography and illustration, including the scrapbooks of Cecil Beaton, are also available, as are designs for shoes, hats, underwear, cosmetics and jewellery.
