This has been a year of significant rebuilding and recovery for the V&A and we continue to work to mitigate the lingering effects of Covid-19. Yet the V&A’s remobilisation is an extraordinary milestone to celebrate. After so many false starts and delays, it was such a joy last May to welcome visitors back for the first time since 2020 to all seven miles of galleries across the museum, and to a vibrant programme of events and exhibitions. While we utilised every opportunity to maximise our digital offerings during lockdown, it felt even more exciting to be back in real life.

The V&A has seldom looked better too. Our transformed Raphael Court is receiving the attention it deserves; the refurbished Dorothy and Michael Hintze Galleries boast Canova’s The Three Graces as a new resident; the new Design 1900 – Now gallery is open to visitors to explore the story of 20th-century design; and a suite of ambitious and enchanting exhibitions await.

The past year has shown the breadth of the V&A’s programming with the museum in South Kensington hosting a remarkable six exhibitions spanning the cultural heritage of Iran, the curious world of Alice: Curiouser and Curiouser and centuries of masculine gender expression in Fashioning Masculinities: The Art of Menswear. Alongside our exhibition programme, the galleries have held a number of displays that have unpacked stories from ceramics to industrial photography, celebrated 100 years of the Royal Academy of Dance and explored the drawings of Sir James Thornhill.

Without our collections, none of this would be possible. Despite the financial challenges of the pandemic, we have been able to make some important acquisitions: from the career-spanning archives of industrial designer Sir Kenneth Grange, which will be accessible in the forthcoming V&A East Storehouse, to the 19th-century statuette, The Death of Cleopatra by Henry de Triqueti, a masterpiece saved for the nation following an export ban. A living museum is an acquiring museum and the collection’s development is essential to ensuring the relevance and ongoing evolution of the V&A.

It has been truly wonderful to see development across our portfolio of sites this year. We announced the name and vision of Young V&A (formerly the V&A Museum of Childhood), setting out this ambitious museum’s intention to be a powerhouse of creativity for children aged 0-14, and we look forward to its opening in 2023. Meanwhile, V&A East Storehouse was introduced as the new home of our collections – one in which visitors can immerse themselves to learn more about conservation, research and collections care. And, a short walk across the Olympic Park, the magnificent V&A East Museum has topped out and is standing proud among its East Bank partners. We look forward to sharing more details about the opening in due course.

We are extremely grateful to the museum staff who have worked so hard across all departments to engage with visitors both on site and online. We have loved welcoming everyone back and extend thanks to our loyal members, patrons and donors for their support throughout the year.

Sir Nicholas Coleridge
Director’s foreword

Liberated from Covid-19 apps and timed tickets, life has returned to the V&A in all its vitality and immediacy as our seven-day public opening and pre-pandemic programming were restored. Entering through the redesigned Grand Entrance from Cromwell Road, visitors can again delight in the full spectrum of museum-wide activity.

Over the past two years, critical questions about the role and place of museums within public life have taken on new urgency – whether in the fight against climate change or challenging social inequity. We have placed our own practices in the spotlight, renewing our commitment to embed sustainability across the institution – across collecting, exhibition programming and ways of working. A comprehensive three-year plan, published in September 2021, announced our priorities as we work towards the ambition of net zero emissions by 2035. Actions are also underway to achieve our strategic commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion (EDI) principles. Being an actively anti-racist institution requires an organisation-wide effort and we are grateful to be guided on this journey with the appointment of a dedicated V&A EDI Lead.

We also welcomed the opportunity to reinvigorate and build enduring transcultural partnerships around the world this year. I visited Ghana to begin conversations about a renewable cultural partnership centred around the V&A collection of Asante court regalia, which entered the collection following the looting of Kumasi in 1874. We are optimistic that a new partnership model can forge a potential pathway for these important artefacts to be on display in Ghana in the coming years.

Meanwhile, the Gilbert Trust for the Arts, guardian of the collection that is on long-term loan to the V&A, achieved the remarkable feat of returning a 4,250-year-old gold Anatolian ewer to Turkey. A major provenance research project revealed that Arthur Gilbert had unknowingly acquired the ewer from a dealer involved in the trade of illicit antiquities. It is now placed in the Museum of Anatolian Civilisations alongside other artefacts from the Hattian Civilisation, and a spectacular commission by the metalsmith Adi Toch has been created as a counter piece to commemorate the ewer.

Design as a catalyst for change is also at the core of our flagship learning programme. DesignLab Nation has expanded to three new regions, while the Upstart Creative Careers Festival launched to help young people explore creative career pathways. In the third year of V&A Innovate, nearly 2,000 students took part, from schools across 19 counties in England.

We were thrilled that V&A Innovate won a €50,000 Art Explora – Académie des beaux-arts European Award, commending those that reach new and wider audiences in innovative ways.

From Sunderland to Plymouth, Doncaster to Blackburn, we want to inspire people wherever they live: through sites from V&A Dundee to the V&A Wedgwood Collection in Barlaston, our extensive loans to UK-wide venues, and long-nurtured regional partnerships. As a national museum, we hold a truly national mandate.

In a world continuing to emerge from a pandemic, we are also laying the foundations for the V&A’s future as an international museum, more committed than ever in its aim to showcase the very best of art, design, performance and creativity.

Strategic priorities

Still From Creativity. It's what makes us, by director Georgia Hudson at Park Pictures, a creative campaign film launched by the V&A in April 2022. Photo: Victoria and Albert Museum, London
The names and curatorial vision for two new V&A sites as part of East Bank in Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park were unveiled this year. V&A East Museum opens in 2025 on the Stratford Waterfront and V&A East Storehouse opens in 2024. Together they will:

- Celebrate global creativity
- Provide unprecedented access to the V&A’s collections
- Empower young people
- Be truly rooted in the local community

First acquisitions include the monumental Portrait of Melissa Thompson, 2020, by Kehinde Wiley, generously supported by Art Fund and a legacy gift from Dr Philip da Costa, and a ceramic frieze, Auntie, Mum and Me Talking About My Fabric Collection, 2016, by Mawuena Kattah.

250,000 objects have now been made ready to move to V&A East Storehouse from Blythe House, alongside 350,000 library books and 1,000 archives.

20,000+ local people and creatives have been consulted to date, ensuring V&A East is created with and for east Londoners.

“Topped out”
V&A East Museum reached a major construction milestone, with the shell reaching its full height. The Japanese concept of “Ma” or “the space between” influenced architects O’Donnell + Tuomey’s vision for the museum’s faceted appearance.

Young V&A

Details of the full-scale transformation of the former V&A Museum of Childhood and its new name were announced this year. The first project of its kind will see the museum designed with – and for – the young.

Construction begins on the transformation of the museum’s 150-year-old home, creating three new permanent galleries titled Imagine, Play and Design; a temporary exhibition gallery, an expanded learning centre, and a transformed visitor experience throughout. Young V&A will open to visitors in 2023.

A host of new acquisitions for Young V&A range from the 3D printed prosthetic Hero Arm by UK-based company Open Bionics and garments by sustainable fashion designer Bethany Williams inspired by the V&A’s National Childhood Collection.

30,000+

collection items have temporarily moved from the museum’s Bethnal Green site to storage in South Kensington. Most will end up in V&A East Storehouse.

The first Young V&A Designer in Residence

Maraid McEwan joined the team in February 2022 with a focus on creativity and mindfulness.
Equality, diversity and inclusion

Industry support
V&A East collaborated with British-Nigerian artist Yinka Shonibare CBE RA on the 2021 Frieze x Deutsche Bank Emerging Curators Fellowship, an initiative that supports emerging Black and POC curators. The V&A East curatorial fellow will join the museum in 2022.

Training
EDI Lead Ali Jafarey has supported the Talent and Skills team in building and implementing a mandatory programme for all employees.
- Online webinars focusing on unconscious bias and the impact on the workplace launched in January 2022 and have been attended by more than 150 employees so far
- A bespoke eLearning course, Unconscious Bias at Work, was introduced for all new employees as part of their corporate induction programme
- Workshops on Inclusive Leadership have also been delivered to the Executive and Trustee boards

Public-facing initiatives
The global scope of the V&A’s fashion collections have been broadened through the development of the Africa Fashion exhibition, which has also been an opportunity to consider how best to attract, welcome and retain a wider audience.

An expanded, diverse range of creatives has been sought this year to work with the museum on V&A Friday Late and Fashion in Motion programmes.
Learning

The V&A has continued to expand its support for schools, design professionals and adult learners, with a mission to develop and inspire people around the UK using the museum’s expertise and unique collections.

V&A Innovate

The V&A’s national design challenge for secondary students aims to inspire the next generation of artists, designers and innovators, and to advocate for the vital need for creative education. It was enriched by the opening of the V&A’s new permanent gallery this year, Design 1900 – Now, featuring key collection objects and new acquisitions. Created to support Design & Technology at Key Stage 3, V&A Innovate aims to forge connections between in-school learning and what’s on display.

€50,000

Art Explora – Académie des beaux-arts European Award was received to support V&A Innovate in 2022–23, as it completed a third successful year focused on the themes Renew, Connect and Move.

Nearly 2,000 students took part in lessons, after-school clubs and off-timetable enrichment days, and 119 teams entered ideas from 26 schools.

DesignLab Nation

The V&A’s national secondary schools programme, developed in partnership with regional museums, designers and schools to expand the reach of the V&A’s collection and expertise outside of London, supports the teaching of the Design & Technology GCSE.

Three new regional partners have joined the scheme. Secondary school students in Ipswich, Blackpool and Plymouth now have access to the V&A’s groundbreaking programme.

Digital and media innovation

A new e-commerce platform

A new e-commerce platform offers improved security and a frictionless retail space, securing the V&A’s future digital commercial growth and driving new membership sales online. Online visitors can now purchase tickets, merchandise and membership – and make museum donations – in a single online transaction, with a choice of multiple payment options.

24,000 fans gained for the museum’s account. Its videos received some two million views and 185,000 engagements, making the V&A the second most popular UK museum on the platform.

@vamuseum on TikTok

The V&A’s TikTok channel launched in April 2021, aimed at engaging a younger demographic. The V&A has partnered with TikTok specifically to produce educational content, drawing on funding from a #LearnOnTikTok bursary and bespoke advice and platform support.

Alice in cinemas

The V&A filmed an exclusive, 80-minute private view of the immersive exhibition Alice: Curiouser and Curiouser for the big screen. It featured close-ups of key objects and interviews with Peter Blake and Ralph Steadman.

122 cinemas nationwide

Screened the film to more than 2,000 people, and it was broadcast nationally on Sky Arts.
Community engagement

Young V&A
Co-creation is at the heart of Young V&A. Ahead of its opening in 2023, ongoing learning and engagement work has spanned early years sensory play sessions and creative programming for schools.

Young V&A Collective
Launched in September 2021, the Young V&A Collective is a group of 11–14-year-olds who have helped develop content, reaching from soundscapes to sustainable fashion design, to inform the new galleries at the centre of the transformed museum.

V&A East
V&A East has been working with a wide variety of community groups in east London to create opportunities for young people, engage with diverse voices and highlight new forms of creative excellence.

Launched in September 2021, the Young V&A Collective is a group of 11–14-year-olds who have helped develop content, reaching from soundscapes to sustainable fashion design, to inform the new galleries at the centre of the transformed museum.

Youth Workers in Residence
Working as VARI x V&A East’s first Youth Workers in Residence, the design collective RESOLVE worked with organisations across the Olympic boroughs (Newham, Tower Hamlets, Hackney and Waltham Forest) to run creative workshops exploring young people’s connection to their local area.

A Vibe Called Tech
As part of a three-month creative residency supported by Google Arts and Culture, this agency collaborated with young people on digital content experiments.
