A HISTORY OF JEWELLERY

V&A

Introduction

This course reveals the history of jewellery- transcending borders and centuries- from the Middle Ages to today. You'll learn about the collection of 3,500 jewels in the V&A's William and Judit Bollinger Jewellery Gallery, as well as other museum departments and major international museum collections. Beyond a chronology, various themes will be explored, including: the century-long traditions of making jewellery, the use of prints and drawings as inspiration, and the effect of innovative modern technologies.

Changes in economy and society were significant in the choice of jewels and materials, as were new trends in dress fashions. Styles were often influenced by historical events, international trade and art movements. Jewels are more than simply adornment and symbols of status, they are worn as a sign of authority and distinction, as symbols of faith or protective amulets, and may be personal to the wearer as an expression of devotion, love, grief or hope. In essence, jewellery is more than adornment, it accompanies the wearer through life from cradle to grave, marking special occasion.

Guest speakers on this course include Rachel Church, Sandy Jones and Silvia Weidenbach, and your course leader is Beatriz Chadour-Sampson.
